Indian Motion Pictures Review.Titration of anthracyclines in preparation for large-scale clinical trials of effectiveness. Titration of doxorubicin (ADM) and epirubicin (EPI) to achieve a circulating plasma concentration of more than  $10^{-6}$  M, as measured by high-performance liquid chromatography, was done in patients with advanced disease in a Phase II trial to determine whether all patients would be exposed to high concentrations of drug. The range of plasma concentrations of ADM and EPI was then examined retrospectively in patients with good and poor response to first-line chemotherapy. Toxicity was higher in patients with circulating concentrations of ADM or EPI more than  $10^{-6}$  M, but there was no additional benefit of concentration-related toxicity in patients without histologic evidence of cardiotoxicity or prior radiation. With the development of anthracycline-based clinical trials, there is a need for specialized centers to provide a more consistent approach to anthracycline administration, including adequate diagnosis of anthracycline-induced cardiotoxicity, dose escalation, and use of concomitant therapy, such as hematopoietic growth factors.* = 10) of those cells (Fig. 4{ref-type="fig"}).
