I have to say that I really enjoy this update and it is a massive step forward for Photoshop. It does make my workflow in Lightroom much easier to mimic in Photoshop. It is not perfect. I have found that sometimes if you are working in the background and make an adjustment in Lightroom and then make another adjustment back in Photoshop the image in Photoshop can be slightly off. However, I've been experimenting with using the new Smart Filter, and that feature is excellent. In fact, this may be the perfect Photoshop for working in Lightroom or Lightroom for the future. I suggest strongly that you read PSR's and then do a test run to see if you'll like it. It really has the potential to make you a better photographer. Here is my workflow for the new features in Photoshop.

Firstly, if you are using the AE Bridge you can change the settings in Bridge itself to make those settings available to Photoshop 'for real.' This enables you to see the settings again in Photoshop. This may be done by right clicking on the layer in Bridge (and the layers inside the group), and then clicking on New>Photoshop>Preset. This will open the preset dialog and you will see the settings you chose in Bridge. Just change the name and you're done. I found it is easy to create a new preset and save it with whatever name you choose. This is how the setting show up in Photoshop and will work in Lightroom for you.

Secondly, you can import PDFs directly into Photoshop or open them automatically. The new 'smart' filters (e.g. the Crop tool in Lightroom) are also in Photoshop. These filters automatically resize the image to fit the regular proportions of Photoshop. The 'smart' sharpening, contrast and vibrance filters which are in Lightroom are also in Photoshop. However, they are not smart when you use them from Lightroom, so you have to make your own 'smart' adjustments.

With Share for Review enabled, collaborative editing could never be easier. Open an image in Photoshop, enjoy some other mode with other in-app tools, or make a selection, and then share your work with others for them to complete, give you feedback on or even comment. The industry-leading interactions and experiences people use on desktops and mobile devices now need to adapt to these new ways of working. Photoshop Creative Cloud embraces this. Now with the Photoshop CC application and the cloud, people don't need to buy or download the desktop app at all. Instead, they simply use the same interface and tools that they've always used in Photoshop, and they forget they're using a desktop app at all. In addition, these new tools were made for the browser, and so you can run Photoshop CC in any modern browser, and use any tools they're accustomed to in Photoshop, including selections, masks, layers and content-aware fill, straight from a web page. "The web is revolutionising how people interact with technology, so we have a responsibility to give them the best experience possible without forcing them to leave the platform of their choice," said Kare. "Share for Review brings active collaboration into the browser as surely as inking did. We've created features to make it even easier to interact with one another, while staying in the browser." The most dramatically improved new feature is the new one-click Delete tool. The replacement is a new, simple and easy-to-use tool that replaces the older Delete tool. Because the tool is so useful, it can be pressed in multiple clicks to remove multiple objects.
