Love the software. I also purchased the Amazon Kindle Paperwhite 2nd Generation from Amazon with my adobe subscription and 2 of my old paperbooks from my library. I have no physical books. I went into HT position last year and just read the paperback books. No more printing books out. Pathetic. I now have all my books on my ipad.

I purchased several hundred photos using Lightroom and hit a brick wall on importing. Photo imports to Lightroom 4 took a long time on my 1TB drive. Can't even tell you how long they take with the upgraded drive. I have a one year subscription to Creative Cloud and plan to purchase a new drive. I will gladly pay for an "iPhoto replacement".

I use Lightroom for both digital photo filing and for arranging larger collections. For local organization, my system uses a 30 GB external hard drive (external USB 3.0) as the primary storage and a NAS box (syncs with both). The external drive is a Samsung T3 from Amazon MP3 at a raw price of $79.99. My NAS box is a Synology DS103+ (NAS, file server, printer, printer scanner, Home Automation), which has two 1 TB hard drives (NAS) and two 500 GB HDs for local storage. The Synology NAS costs $199.99. In both cases, the NAS box is about half the price of an equivalent HDD NAS system.

I have also purchased an 11.6 inch MacBook Air, which I used to transfer files to my laptop via an external USB hard drive.

I use an Apple hasRetinalID security label. The label provides a strong ID to protect my personal information in the event of a malfunction, loss, theft, or theft of the MacBook, and also prevents the MacBook being connected to unauthorized devices, such as the NAS or print server.

I use a folder called "Photos" for all my photo collections.

A serial number is assigned to each copy of Lightroom. This number is used by the NAS box as the root directory for the folders affected.

Using Lightroom for importing is relatively fast. When working on a large digital collection, some optimization of background import is required.
